«Food Security»

The 13th Dialogue on Science of the Academia Engelberg Foundation will be dedicated to the subject of food security. How can availability, access to and consumption of food be secured in light of the rapidly growing population? International experts will take a closer look as to whether agriculture and production technologies are prepared to handle this population growth. The conference in the monastery village of Engelberg offers a platform for interacting and networking with personalities from all over the world and for jointly developing possible solutions. Experts from business, politics and science as well as Juan Gonzales-Valero of Syngenta, Rosamond Naylor of Stanford University, Hans R. Herren of the Biovision Foundation, Klaus Töpfer of the Institute for Advanced Sustainability Studies will shed a light on the subject of food security from different perspectives.
